Product Description

Dipotassium Glycyrrhizinate CAS 68797-35-3 capsicum extract powder

Description

A delusion The roots of licorice (Glycyrrhiza glabra) are used to extract glycyrrhizinate, a naturally occurring chemical. It is well known for having remarkable anti-inflammatory and skin-soothing properties.

In cosmetic formulations, dipotassium glycyrrhizinate is commonly used to soothe and relieve skin irritation, redness, and itching. It improves the skin's barrier function, which is advantageous for people with sensitive and reactive skin types.

Due to its skin-lightening properties, this chemical is beneficial in treating hyperpigmentation and encouraging a more even skin tone.

Application

Dipotassium glycyrrhizinate is a chemical that is made from licorice root extract and has the CAS number 68797-35-3. Because of its calming and anti-inflammatory qualities, it is frequently utilized in skincare and cosmetic products. These are some of its primary applications:

Skincare products: Because dipotassium glycyrrhizinate has calming and anti-inflammatory properties for the skin, it is frequently used in skincare formulations. It can soothe and lessen itching, redness, and irritation of the skin. It is frequently utilized in formulations for skin disorders like rosacea, dermatitis, and eczema, as well as in solutions for sensitive or reactive skin.

Oral hygiene items: Mouthwash and toothpaste are two examples of products that include dipotassium glycyrrhizinate. It is included because of its possible antibacterial and anti-inflammatory qualities, which may help calm oral tissues and lessen oral inflammation.

Hair care goods: Due to its possible advantages for the scalp and hair, dipotassium glycyrrhizinate may be present in several hair care products. It is thought to possess qualities that might lessen irritation, calm the scalp, and encourage stronger hair development. However, there has to be more research done in this area as the benefits and specific efficacy for hair care may differ.

It's crucial to remember that before utilizing products containing dipotassium glycyrrhizinate, you should speak with a dermatologist or other healthcare provider if you have any particular skin problems or conditions. Personalized advice and guidance tailored to your specific needs can be obtained from them, and they can assist in determining its compatibility with your skincare regimen.
