Description

The CAS number 85507-69-3 corresponds to the unique identifier for aloe vera extract in the Chemical Abstracts Service registry. The gel-like substance found in the leaves of the aloe vera plant is commonly used in various products, including skincare, cosmetics, and healthcare.

Application

Here is a description of aloe vera and its properties:

Soothing and Cooling: Aloe vera is well-known for its soothing and cooling properties. When applied topically, it can provide relief to irritated or sunburned skin. The gel acts as a moisturizer and forms a protective barrier on the skin, helping to retain moisture and promote healing.

Moisturizing and Hydrating: Aloe vera gel is rich in polysaccharides, which have the ability to retain water and provide hydration to the skin. It is often used in moisturizers, lotions, and other skincare products to help improve skin hydration and prevent dryness.

Anti-inflammatory: Aloe vera contains various compounds, such as glycoproteins and polysaccharides, which possess anti-inflammatory properties. These properties can help reduce inflammation and redness, making it beneficial for conditions like acne, eczema, and psoriasis.

Wound Healing: Aloe vera has been traditionally used to promote wound healing. The gel contains enzymes, vitamins, and minerals that can help stimulate the production of new cells, enhance collagen synthesis, and accelerate the healing process.

Antioxidant: Aloe vera contains antioxidants, including vitamins C and E, beta-carotene, and polyphenols. These antioxidants help protect the skin from oxidative stress caused by free radicals, which can contribute to premature aging and damage.
